

ACWD's Conservation Program

Alameda County Water District's (District) water conservation program has been in place since 1977. The District was a founding member of the California Urban Water Conservation Council (CUWCC), established in 1991, now known as the California Water Efficiency Partnership (CalWEP).

Please refer to the District's Urban Water Management Plan \(UWMP\) for more information about the District's conservation program implementation and planning. Conservation is also a significant component of the District's Integrated Resources Plan (IRP), a plan that takes into consideration all essential elements of water supply management to ensure that the District can support its mission to provide a reliable supply of high-quality water at a reasonable price to its customers.

The District is a member of the Bay Area Water Supply & Conservation Agency (BAWSCA), an agency that represents the interests of 24 cities and water districts, and two private utilities that purchase water from the San Francisco regional water system. ACWD frequently coordinates with BAWSCA on water conservation programs.

Awards

In March of 2015, The District was awarded the Silicon Valley Water Conservation Award for its conservation efforts, including an innovative low-income water savings assistance program. In 2014 and 2015, ACWD upgraded inefficient water fixtures and identified leaks in low-income qualified homes throughout its service area.

Partnerships

The District is proud to partner with local businesses, local, Bay Area, and State agencies on water conservation efforts to increase water efficiency in the District's service area. Through these efforts, the District's Water Conservation Program is able to provide additional water saving resources for our customers.
